Mosquitoes can be more than a nuisance — they can be a threat to your health.

Public health officials are often at the forefront of any media attention when mosquito-carried diseases occur in either animals or humans. To assist with media, public relations, and information sharing efforts, consider turning to the recommended first source for local information, the Michigan Mosquito Control Association (MMCA). The MMCA is a non-profit, professional organization that promotes mosquito control throughout the state. For accurate and up-to-date information on virus activity, public education strategies, media outreach, training, surveillance, control methods, and product information, contact the MMCA or visit the website listed below.
